Prevent Duplicate RMR Invoices and Support Parallelization

Manually running the RMR invoice generation job now prevents duplicate RMR invoices (duplicate invoices could occur during manual RMR generation, not automatic RMR generation). This allows users to manually run the job multiple times without causing duplicate invoices and we can scale the process for larger customers over time.

When a user manually starts the RMR job, it checks and refreshes the next invoice date (aCustomerRecurring.NextInvoiceDate) before creating an invoice to verify whether an invoice has already been generated for the period.

If the job is already running for a customer, and a user manually starts the job again, subsequent job waits for currently running job to complete without creating duplicates.

We implemented safeguards to allow future parallelization of the RMR job across large customer datasets without conflicts or duplication.
